Brittany Madderra is a versatile litigator whose practice focuses on complex litigation, mass torts, and products liability matters. The clients she serves range from local businesses and government entities to large international corporations. Her work often involves advocating for manufacturers, retailers, distributors, owners, and customers involved in products liability litigation. In doing so, she draws on her depth of experience representing these clients in state and federal courts. She additionally handles a wide range of civil litigation matters, including personal injury, wrongful death, and employment law, often focused on discrimination or harassment claims, employment policies, and workplace injuries. Brittany is also highly experienced in identifying the critical legal issues that will enable clients to prevail on appeal.

Brittany graduated from the University of Washington School of Law, where she served as Executive Managing Editor of the Washington International Law Journal (formerly the Pacific Rim Law & Policy Journal).
