Stuart Jones defends insurers in first-party property disputes and class action litigation involving both commercial and personal lines of insurance. He brings extensive experience resolving property insurance disputes involving large property loss cases around the country. Stuart provides coverage opinions and advises various commercial lines insurers on losses involving issues of collapse, flood, contamination, business interruption, faulty workmanship, earth movement, and allegations of bad faith.

Insurers turn to Stuart because of his experience in the trial and appellate courts in litigating large, complex cases, including in defense of COVID-19 related cases in national class actions. As a commercial litigator, Stuart also has been part of a team handling disputes involving international trademark infringement and unfair competition claims.

Stuart worked for several years in Washington, DC as a legislative aide to an Oregon congressman. While enrolled as a law student in a night school program, he was a law clerk for a district court judge in Clackamas County, followed by a clerkship for the presiding judge for Multnomah County Circuit Court.
