Zabrina Delgado is skilled at helping to resolve product liability, construction defect, premises liability, and catastrophic injury disputes. She is also brought on to defend clients in professional liability cases involving alleged legal malpractice. Zabrina enjoys digging into the technical aspects of complicated cases with quickly evolving case law and working with a variety of experts. Her role includes evaluating a case to determine the next steps, doing in-depth research, drafting memoranda, and attending hearings. Given her litigation experience, she's candid with clients giving them an early read on the direction the case may take, and is able to anticipate their needs. A solid communicator who knows how to break down complex issues, she lays things out clearly and thoroughly to help clients understand what is happening in their case and provides consistent updates.

Having started her legal career at a plaintiff-side firm, Zabrina has insight into how the other side thinks and their potential strategies. She knows how to best approach cases and opposing counsel to evaluate claims and what it takes to reach a successful outcome. With this experience and a psychology degree, she brings the human factor and empathy into technical cases and is able to serve clients more holistically.

Prior to joining Bullivant, Zabrina worked at a boutique insurance defense firm where she was exposed to a wide variety of cases, from personal injury to multi-million-dollar trademark infringement and unfair competition cases involving complicated products and intellectual property. She gained experience with extensive e-discovery and related discovery disputes in Lanham Act cases, appellate practice, and class action lawsuits, and served as lead counsel in arbitrations.

As a law student, Zabrina dedicated much of her time to pro bono work. As a result of her contributions, she was inducted into the Order of the Barristers and named recipient of Wake Forest's Robert F. Goldberg Award for excellence in trial advocacy.
